ATTENTION CALLED TO NEGLECTED INDUSTRY.

Supply is Uncertain and Temporary. While the Demand is Sure and Con--Just Now There is Activity in Both Supply and Demand-Turkey Raising Should Be Made a Regular Industry.

With very few exceptions, turkey farming is an industry that is un-known in the Northwest. Almost every farmer who keeps fowls of any raises a few of the birds that are so highly prized on Thanksgiving day, and no feast during Christmas week is considered fit to be partaken of unless graced by their very presence; but then the growing of turkeys as a specialty is almost unheard of.

Local markets must needs depend for their supply of turkeys upon the uncertain supply to be furnished by the farmer who. If his inclination and the absence of pests and disease allowed to rear a half dozen more of the fowls than he needed for his own

Daily the turkeys are being brought to town. The back of almost every lumber wagon contains a crute of the red crested birds or a few sucks of the creatures, with their knotty, won-dering heads protruding from holes in the gunny. Like the house wife disposes of her superfluous hens or extra dozen of eggs, the farmer sells his turkeys. The time has not yet come when the general raising of tur-keys in Oregon will be an industry, keys in Oregon will be an industry. Judge W. H. Moore, of Chicago, keys in Oregon will be an industry lately paid in New York $8000 cash followed as closely as the fattening of swine, chickens, sheep or cattle.

Thomas Jefferson Coming to the Frazer Next Wednesday.

That worthless village idle Rip Van Winkle, who has long been a shining star to the American stage in the period of Joseph Jefferson, and who has retired on account of his age, will be continued by his son.

Thomas Jefferson, who is so like his father in appearance, and who plays the part as his father did 40 years ago, that artistically we have lost nothing, and time will surely endear Thomas Jefferson in the hearts of the public as his illustrious father has retired on account of his age, will be continued by his son.
